4. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance.

The present invention is directed to objects and a method for transferring to, and updating information on, information handling systems such as spreadsheets, word processors, with information from web pages, other unstructured flat files, structured data sources such a databases, and other sources.

Claims 1 and 41 recite, or similarly recite, a method comprising the steps of reading the ordinary expression previously entered manually by the user in the array of data elements, requesting information from the data source based on the ordinary expression, and receiving the requested information from the data source and transfer the requested information to the application for processing and display in the array of data elements alongside the ordinary expression.

The closest prior art, Moseley, Ainsbury and Hakim, when combined show a substantially similar method. However, the applied prior art, singularly or in combination still fail to anticipate or render the above cited limitations obvious.
